

As it is for all American citizens, my free speech is protected. As a professor following the longstanding tradition of inquiry by intellectual giants who challenged the claimed shape of the earth, Euclidian geometry, and the validity of tri-tones and parallel fifths, I possess the right and duty to question anything and everything. Thus, when a foreign head of state invites American children living in their nation to attend a Christmas celebration at that nation's most important political edifice, I consider that a classy move. Our American children were not required or coerced to attend. Due to the current political climate – because it was Mr. Putin who made the invite – some have deemed that description hate speech. My comment stands and is anything but hateful.

My constitutionally protected response to a comment demanding the baseless impeachment of President Elect Donald J. Trump was an ironic and likely baseless alternative suggestion that America impeach someone whose posted birth certificate has been carefully analyzed and determined a forgery by at least two independent experts – one with 60 years experience in the forensic analysis of forged documents and a European agency expert in the identification of forged electronic documents. Recent history vividly shows that any suggestions or findings that disrupt the beliefs and knowledgebase of a rabid mob bitter about the choice made by the free people of the United States are unacceptable. Any and every challenge to the comfort zone of this self-declared enlightened elite is deemed racist or hateful. Challenging common and unconfirmed beliefs is neither racist nor hateful.

Lastly, as a citizen and professional, my assessments regarding the professionalism, ability, or lack thereof of any commentator or performer are as valid as are anyone else's in my field. Like millions upon millions of Americans, personal experience suggests that American news media is biased and highly suspect. Consequently, while I am sorry if anyone was offended by my constitutionally protected exercises of free speech and inquiry – I will never apologize for exercising my rights. Moreover, I retain and will fully exercise the right to pursue legal action against anyone slandering me or attempting to subvert the Constitutional rights of people because their beliefs are not in lockstep with those of a defeated mob.

Wishing everyone a most wonderful 1/20/2017 and beyond,
Dr. Eduardo J. Calle
